About Mount Albert

Mount Albert's story begins in the early 1800s, when Quaker settlers Samuel and Rufus Birchard laid the foundations of a village first called Birchardville. By 1850, the first store opened, offering dry goods to villagers and local farmers. Centre Street, the village's main north-south road, traces the path of an ancient Algonquin trail. In 1860, the village was renamed Mount Albert in honour of Prince Albert's visit to Upper Canada.

From its farming roots to the residential growth of the late 20th century, Mount Albert has grown into a vibrant community. Today, it blends rural charm with modern convenience, a welcoming place where all people alike enjoy a range of services just steps away from their homes.
